Overview of the Programme

Dr. Rimjim Borah, HoD of the Department of economics provided insights into the future prospects of studying economics. She mentioned her deliberation that economics graduates have a wide range of career options across sectors such as finance, consulting, government, academia, and international organizations. The analytical and problem-solving skills acquired through studying economics are highly valued in various industries. There is a growing demand for professionals with expertise in economic analysis, data interpretation, and policy evaluation. Industries such as finance, market research, and public policy rely heavily on economic insights to make informed decisions.

Dr. Borah also explored diverse career options in fields such as communications, marketing, publishing, education, and entrepreneurship. An interaction session with students was also held in this programme. She mentioned that Arts graduate students possess a wide range of transferable skills, including critical thinking, communication, creativity, research, problem-solving, and cultural competence. These skills are highly valued by employers across industries and are essential for success in today's knowledge-based economy.
